Senate passes Dodd-Frank revisions.
On March 14 the Senate passed S. 2155, the Economic Growth, Regulatory Relief, and Consumer Protection Act, which would lift some restrictions on smaller banks. Among other provisions, the bill would reduce HMDA lending data reporting requirements and give HUD new discretion to label small PHAs (those with fewer than 550 total public housing units and vouchers) as troubled. It would also renew the Protecting Tenants at Foreclosure Act, which had expired, and reauthorize and expand HUD’s Family Self-Sufficiency program. The House Financial Services Committee has considered numerous bills that would change the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, and committee Chair Jeb Hensarling (R-TX) indicated he hopes to add their provisions to the Senate bill.

Proposed change to HUD’s mission statement draws criticism.
The Huffington Post reported on March 6 that HUD officials were considering shortening HUD’s mission statement, leaving out words including “build inclusive and sustainable communities free from commitment to fair housing. As of March 15, the old mission statement remained on HUD’s website.

Shortage of 7.2 million homes documented by NLIHC.
The Gap: A Shortage of Affordable Homes reports a shortfall of 7.2 million affordable and available rental homes for extremely low-income renter households, those with incomes at or below the poverty level or 30% of their area median income. There are just 35 affordable and available rental homes for every 100 of these lowest income renter households nationwide. No state has an adequate supply of affordable rentals for these tenants. As a result, 71% of the lowest-income renters spend more than half their incomes on housing. The National Low Income Housing Coalition calls for increasing investments in affordable housing programs for the lowest-income households.
